Austin: The Creative Hub of Texas

Austin, the state capital and cultural hub of Texas, has long been a magnet for filmmakers. The city's eclectic vibe and thriving arts scene provide a vibrant backdrop for both independent and mainstream productions.

Explore the historic Sixth Street district, where the neon lights and live music venues mirror the city's energetic spirit. Visit the iconic Austin City Limits Live at the Moody Theater, where countless musical legends have graced the stage. Don't miss the Zilker Park, a sprawling green space that has been featured in films like "Boyhood" and "Bernie".

The Hill Country: Picturesque Rolling Hills

Escape the city hustle and venture into the picturesque Texas Hill Country, a region of rolling hills, sprawling vineyards, and charming towns. The Hill

Country has been the setting for numerous films, including "Giant" and "The Tree of Life".

Drive along the scenic Texas Wine Trail, lined with wineries and vineyards. Visit the historic Fredericksburg, a charming German-influenced town that has been featured in films like "Hope Floats". Hike the Enchanted Rock State Natural Area, a geological wonder that served as the backdrop for "Superman Returns".

Dallas-Fort Worth: A City of Contrasts

The bustling Dallas-Fort Worth area offers a striking contrast to the serene Hill Country. This metropolitan hub boasts a skyline dotted with skyscrapers and a thriving arts and culture scene.

Wander through the vibrant Deep Ellum district, known for its live music venues and street art. Visit the Dallas Arts District, home to world-class museums like the Dallas Museum of Art. Take a stroll through the Fort Worth Stockyards National Historic District, a preserved historic district that celebrates Texas' cowboy heritage.

Marfa: A Desert Oasis

Journey to the remote town of Marfa in the Chihuahuan Desert. This enigmatic town has become a creative haven for artists and filmmakers alike. The vast desert landscapes and unique architectural landmarks provide a surreal backdrop for films like "Giant" and "Paris, Texas".
