Unnecessary Roughness tells the story of the Warriors, a high school football team from Chicago. The team is led by quarterback Ed Rooney (Kevin Bacon), who is a reckless and undisciplined player. After the team's coach is fired, they are forced to play by the rules under their new coach, Lou Brown (John Candy).

Brown is a former professional football player who is known for his tough and uncompromising style. He quickly clashes with Rooney, who refuses to change his ways. However, Brown eventually gets through to Rooney, and the team begins to win games.

As the Warriors continue to win, they attract the attention of a sports agent (Kathy Ireland), who offers them a chance to play in a professional football league. The players are torn between their loyalty to Brown and their dreams of playing in the pros.

In the end, the Warriors decide to stay with Brown and play in the high school playoffs. They win the championship, and Brown is named Coach of the Year.
